Safety Belts Safer

Richmond - A pregnant woman and her unborn child are far safer in automobiles when the woman wears safety belts, according to John T. Hanna, director, Highway Safety Division of Virginia.

"Since death and injury of unbelted victims is statistically related to ejection from the car, lap belts, which usually prevent such ejection, are recommended for pregnant motorists," Hanna said.

A California study of 441 pregnant women involved in accidents showed that ejection from the car is far more serious and likely to be fatal to both mother and child.

Of those mothers ejected in severe collisions, 47 percent of the fetuses were killed (usually the mother also), while of those who remained inside the car, 89 percent kept both their babies and their lives.

The American Medical Association Committee on Medical Aspects of Automotive Safety reports "that despite the real possibility of belt-caused injury to the pregnant woman and her fetus in severe collisions, the woman's overall chances for survival and freedom from serious injury are much better if she uses a restraint system."

Hanna cited that the lap belt is preferable to the absence of any restraint, and the combination of shoulder harness and lap belt provides even greater safety to any passenger.

1973 State Highway Map Available

The 1973 edition of the official state highway map is off the press and now being distributed.

One and one-half million copies have been printed and will be distributed by the Virginia Department of Highways - which prepared the map - and by the Virginia State Travel Service and other travel organizations, and through highway information stations and rest areas.

The map is printed in four colors and features many historic and scenic locations in the state. It shows interstate routes in green, arterial and other US numbered primary highways in red and state numbered primary and major secondary routes in gray.

The interstate and arterial highways have been superimposed on the historic and scenic map, shown on the reverse side of the travel map. The new traffic control signs, which have recently been installed in Virginia, are shown along with other up-to-date information about highways.

The map is available upon request and without charge.

Adventist To Open Work In Niger

WASHINGTON, D. C. - The Seventh-day Adventist Church is laying plans for opening medical and educational work in the newly established Republic of Niger in Central Africa.

In making his report to church's world headquarters here Edward E. White, educational secretary for the Adventist Euro - Africa Division, stated that medical facilities are desperately needed in Niger.

"Education and medicine are much needed in that country", White said, "Only one child in ten attends school." There is one doctor for every 50,000 inhabitants, and only about 800 nurses in the whole country."

Representatives of the church met with the Minister of Health and with the president of Niger. The president has suggested a hospital site on the Niger River, which forms the southern boundary of the country. The hospital would be located in the capital city of Niamey.

The people of Niger White says, are more than 90 per cent Moslem, while the vast northern areas of the country are in Sahara Desert, the southern section does have enough rain to make agriculture - possible. But during the rainy season disease is rampant.

A special mission appropriation has been made by the Seventh-day Adventist denomination - To begin their time in service and medical and educational work there. For the Republic of Niger in Central Africa.
